A Leaders' Discussion

Omni-channel, cross-channel, multi-channel... How can companies survive and adapt their strategy to the development of multiple channels of distribution? What are the pitfalls to avoid in order to remain competitive? Is multi-channel the key of success? PROGRAMME

17 OCTOBER – AFTERNOON SESSION

3 workshops in parallel

- The New Deal for EU Consumers: revision of the EU Consumer Protection Directives
- How to integrate digital influencers (bloggers) in your brand strategy?
- Focus on two top EU markets: Poland & Spain

Here today, gone tomorrow? Is the boom of entrepreneurship and the rise of the collaborative economy the end of work, as we know it?

Between 95 and 99% of all companies across Europe are SMEs with less than 50 persons employed, while the growth of the sharing economy has accelerated much quicker over than any business analyst originally expected. At the same time, the increased digitalization of the world we live in have drastically transformed both our personal and professional lives.

It is now easier than ever before to work remotely, reach out to large audiences via the use of social media and to set different work-life boundaries than before. This fits the millennials, who are now not only the largest generation in the work force, but also open to more flexible ways of working than other generations. How do direct selling companies ensure they can tap into these new developments and how do they ensure they remain relevant both as a direct employer and as a provider of entrepreneurial opportunities?
